

No. 05-1657

In The
Supreme Court of the United States

WASHINGTON,

Petitioner,

v.

WASHINGTON EDUCATION ASSOCIATION,

Respondent.

On Petition For A Writ of Certiorari
To The Supreme Court of Washington

BRIEF AMICUS CURIAE OF THE CAMPAIGN LEGAL CENTER
SUPPORTING PETITIONER

TREVOR POTTER
J. GERALD HEBERT
Counsel of Record
PAUL S. RYAN
CAMPAIGN LEGAL CENTER
1640 Rhode Island Ave. NW
Suite 650
Washington, DC 20036
(202) 736-2200
Attorneys for Amicus Curiae

TABLE OF CONTENTS

	Page
TABLE OF AUTHORITIES.....	ii
STATEMENT OF INTEREST	1
SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT.....	1
ARGUMENT.....	5
I. THE WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT MISCONSTRUED THIS COURT'S DECISIONS IN STREET , ABOOD , HUDSON AND ELLIS AS ESTABLISHING THE MAXIMUM , RATHER THAN THE MINIMUM , FIRST AMENDMENT RIGHTS POSSESSED BY DISSENTING WORKERS	5
II. THE DECISION BELOW INVALIDATING THE STATE'S "OPT-IN" REQUIREMENT DIRECTLY CONFLICTS WITH THIS COURT'S DECISION IN MCCONNELL UPHOLDING THE FEDERAL "OPT-IN" REQUIREMENT	8
III. THE WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT'S DECISION UNDERMINES STATE "OPT-IN" LAWS THROUGHOUT THE NATION	12
CONCLUSION.....	14

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES

	Page
CASES
Aboud v. Detroit Bd. of Educ. , 431 U.S. 209 (1986) ...	4, 5, 6, 8
Am. Fed'n of Labor v. American Sash & Door Co. , 335 U.S. 538 (1949)	3, 5
Austin v. Michigan Chamber of Commerce , 494 U.S. 652 (1990)	12
Chicago Teachers Union, Local No. 1 v. Hudson , 475 U.S. 292 (1986)	4, 5, 6, 8
Ellis v. Brotherhood of Railway, Airline And Steam- ship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express And Sta- tion Employees , 466 U.S. 435 (1984)	4, 6, 8
Fed. Election Comm'n v. Beaumont , 539 U.S. 146 (2003)	12
Fed. Election Comm'n v. Nat'l Right to Work Comm. , 459 U.S. 197 (1982)	10, 12
Int'l Ass'n of Machinists v. Street , 367 U.S. 740 (1961)	4, 5, 8
Lincoln Fed. Labor Union No. 19129 v. Northwest- ern Iron & Metal Co. , 335 U.S. 525 (1949)	3, 5, 6
McConnell v. Fed. Election Comm'n , 540 U.S. 93 (2003)	passim
U.S. v. Automobile Workers , 352 U.S. 567 (1957)	10
Wash. v. Wash. Educ. Ass'n , 156 Wash. 2d 543 (Wash. 2006)	3, 7, 8
CONSTITUTIONS, STATUTES AND LEGISLATION
2 U.S.C. § 434(f)(3)	10

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

	Page
2 U.S.C. § 441b	1, 4, 10, 11, 12
Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002 (BCRA), Pub. L. No. 107-155, 116 Stat. 81 (2002)	10
Hatch Political Activities Act, 53 Stat. 1147 (1939).....	9
Labor Management Relations (Taft-Hartley) Act, 61 Stat. 136 (1947)	9
Alaska Stat. § 15.13.067.....	12
Alaska Stat. § 15.13.074.....	12
Alaska Stat. § 15.13.400(8)	12
Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 16-919	12
Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 16-920	12
Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. § 16-921	12
COLO. CONST. art. XXVIII, § 3(4)	12
COLO. CONST. art. XXVIII, § 6(2)	12
Ind. Code Ann. § 3-9-2-4.....	12
Ind. Code Ann. § 3-9-2-5(b)	12
Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 169.254(1).....	12
Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 169.255.....	12
Mont. Code Ann. § 39-31-402	12
N.C. Gen. Stat. § 163-278.19.....	12
N.D. Cent. Code § 16.1-08.1-01	12
N.D. Cent. Code § 16.1-08.1-03.3	12
Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3517.082	12
Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3599.03	12
Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3599.031	13

TABLE OF AUTHORITIES – Continued

	Page
Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 25, § 3253	13
Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 43, § 1101.1701	13
R.I. Gen. Laws § 17-25-3(1).....	13
R.I. Gen. Laws § 17-25-10.1(h).....	13
S.D. Codified Laws § 12-25-1(1).....	13
S.D. Codified Laws § 12-25-2	13
Tex. Elec. Code Ann. § 253.094	13
Tex. Elec. Code Ann. § 253.100	13
Wash. Rev. Code § 28B.52.045(2)	2, 3
Wash. Rev. Code § 41.56.122.....	2, 3
Wash. Rev. Code § 41.59.100	2, 3
Wash. Rev. Code § 42.17.760	2, 13
Wyo. Stat. Ann. § 22-25-102.....	13

STATEMENT OF INTEREST¹

Amicus curiae Campaign Legal Center, Inc. (CLC) is a nonpartisan, nonprofit organization which works in the area of campaign finance law, generating public policy proposals and participating in state and federal court litigation throughout the nation regarding disclosure, political advertising, contribution limits, enforcement issues, and many other matters. In addition to participating as amicus curiae in many campaign finance-related cases throughout the nation, the CLC served as counsel to defendant-intervenors Senator John McCain, Senator Russell Feingold, et al., in McConnell v. Fed. Election Comm'n, 540 U.S. 93 (2003) [hereinafter McConnell], before the U.S. Supreme Court. The CLC has a longstanding, demonstrated interest in campaign finance law, and this case directly implicates the CLC's interest.

SUMMARY OF ARGUMENT

Federal law has long prohibited labor unions and corporations from using treasury funds to make political contributions or expenditures in connection with federal elections. See 2 U.S.C. § 441b. However, labor unions and corporations are permitted by federal law to establish a "separate segregated fund" (a.k.a. "PAC") into which union members or corporate employees and shareholders may contribute funds (i.e., "opt-in") to financially support a union's or corporation's political activities. This Court has stated its “unanimous view” that the federal law separate segregated fund “opt-in” procedure provides unions and corporations with a “constitutionally sufficient” opportunity to engage in political speech. See McConnell, 540 U.S. at 203.

¹ No counsel for a party authored any part of this brief. No person or other entity other than amicus Campaign Legal Center contributed monetarily to the preparation and submission of this brief. Letters of consent from all parties to the filing of this brief have been filed with the Clerk of this Court.

By comparison to federal law, Washington state law is less restrictive in several respects regarding labor union political activity. First, Washington law permits unions to use treasury funds to make political contributions and expenditures. Second, whereas federal law permits a union’s PAC to accept contributions only from its members (not from nonmembers), Washington law allows unions to use the funds of both members and nonmembers for political purposes – provided that nonmembers affirmatively authorize the use of their funds for political purposes. *See Wash. Rev. Code § 42.17.760.*²

This Washington law, § 42.17.760, which requires union nonmembers to affirmatively consent (“opt-in”) before their funds can be used for political purposes, is the subject of this lawsuit. Despite this Court’s long line of cases upholding the more restrictive federal “opt-in” law, the Supreme Court of Washington purportedly relied on this Court's decisions to invalidate the less restrictive state "opt-in" law on First Amendment grounds. The Washington Supreme Court majority opinion "turns the First Amendment on its head" and "distorts [this Court's] cases delineating the requirements protecting dissenting union members and nonmembers from having their dues used to support political activities with which they disagree to do the opposite: limit the State's ability to protect such dissenters." Wash. v. Wash. Educ. Ass'n, 156 Wash. 2d 543, 571, 574-75 (Wash. 2006) (Sanders, J., dissenting) [hereinafter WEA].

² Washington state law permits unions to include a “union security” provision in collective bargaining agreements – requiring individuals who are not members of the union, but who are part of the collective bargaining unit, to pay an “agency shop fee” to the union to cover the costs of collective bargaining. See Wash. Rev. Code §§ 28B.52.045(2), 41.59.100, and 41.56.122. Washington law further provides that “[a] labor organization may not use agency shop fees paid by an individual who is not a member of the organization to make contributions or expenditures to influence an election or to operate a political committee, unless affirmatively authorized by the individual.” Wash. Rev. Code § 42.17.760 (emphasis added).

The State of Washington has chosen to confer a statutory right on labor unions both to collect "agency shop fees" from nonmembers (i.e., fees to cover the costs of collective bargaining) and to spend union treasury funds to influence state elections. See Wash. Rev. Code §§ 28B.52.045(2), 41.59.100, and 41.56.122. Absent this statutory mechanism for compelling payment of fees by nonmembers, a union has no right, constitutional or otherwise, to compel payment of such fees.

The U.S. Constitution does not require that labor unions be permitted to demand fees from nonmember workers as a condition of employment. This Court has upheld state laws prohibiting unions from compelling workers to become members and pay fees as a condition of employment. See Lincoln Fed. Labor Union No. 19129 v. Northwestern Iron & Metal Co., 335 U.S. 525 (1949) [hereinafter Lincoln Fed.]; Am. Fed'n of Labor v. American Sash & Door Co., 335 U.S. 538 (1949) [hereinafter American Sash].

Nor does the U.S. Constitution require that labor unions be permitted to spend treasury funds to influence elections. This Court has upheld the longstanding federal law ban on labor union and corporation use of treasury funds to influence elections – finding that the separate segregated fund “opt-in” provision sufficiently protects a union’s constitutional rights. See McConnell, 540 U.S. 93, 203-09.

The Supreme Court of Washington conflated Washington unions’ statutorily-conferred rights with constitutional rights and invalidated the state law restricting the election-related use of nonmember agency shop fees on the ground that the “opt-in” requirement violates the First Amendment rights of labor unions and their members. WEA, 156 Wash. 2d at 571. In so ruling, the Washington Court misconstrued this Court’s decisions in Int’l Ass’n of Machinists v. Street, 367 U.S. 740 (1961) [hereinafter Street]; Abood v. Detroit Bd. of Educ., 431 U.S. 209 (1986) [hereinafter Abood]; Chicago Teachers Union, Local No. 1 v. Hudson, 475 U.S. 292 (1986) [hereinafter Hudson]; and Ellis v. Brotherhood of Railway, Airline And Steamship Clerks, Freight Handlers, Express And Station Employees, 466 U.S. 435 (1984) [hereinafter Ellis]. The Washington Court mistakenly interpreted these decisions as establishing the maximum First Amendment rights possessed by workers, rather than recognizing these decisions as establishing the minimum First Amendment rights possessed by workers.

The Supreme Court of Washington’s decision below invalidating Washington’s “opt-in” provision misconstrues this Court’s decisions in Street, Abood, Hudson, and Ellis. Further, the decision below directly conflicts with this Court’s decision in McConnell upholding the “opt-in” provision of 2 U.S.C. § 441b. Moreover, the Washington Court’s decision will undoubtedly be relied upon as persuasive authority in efforts to invalidate "opt-in" laws in other states throughout the nation. For these reasons, we respectfully urge this Court to grant the State of Washington's petition for a writ of certiorari.

ARGUMENT

I. THE WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT MISCONSTRUED THIS COURT'S DECISIONS IN STREET, ABOOD, HUDSON AND ELLIS AS ESTABLISHING THE MAXIMUM, RATHER THAN THE MINIMUM, FIRST AMENDMENT RIGHTS POSSESSED BY DISSENTING WORKERS.

This Court has never held that a labor union possesses a constitutional right to demand financial support from nonmembers for any purpose. While some state legislatures have enacted statutes prohibiting unions from compelling workers to become members and pay fees as a condition of employment (so-called "open shop" laws), other legislative bodies have chosen to confer upon unions the statutory right to compel financial support from nonmembers (so-called "agency shop" laws).

Laws of both types – "open shop" laws and "agency shop" laws – have been challenged before this Court on constitutional grounds. The Court has upheld "open shop" laws prohibiting compelled union membership as constitutional. See Lincoln Fed., 335 U.S. 525; and American Sash, 335 U.S. 538. And though this Court has upheld "agency shop" statutes requiring financial support of a union's collective bargaining by all who receive the benefits of such bargaining, this Court has also repeatedly held that a labor union may not, consistent with the Constitution, use nonmember funds for political purposes when the nonmember explicitly objects to such use. See Railway Employees' Dept. v. Hanson, 351 U.S. 225, 238 (1956) [hereinafter Hanson]; Street, 367 U.S. at 770; Abood, 431 U.S. at 222-23; Ellis, 466 U.S. at 447; and Hudson, 475 U.S. at 294.

By upholding "open shop" laws in Lincoln Fed. and American Sash, this Court made clear that labor unions do not possess a constitutional right to compel financial support from workers. Although unions have no constitutional right to compel financial support from any worker, some jurisdictions (e.g., the State of Washington) have granted unions a statutory right to compel nonmembers to pay fees to support union costs of collective bargaining.³ A union's right to compel financial support from nonmembers – where it exists – is one of statutory law, not constitutional law. Furthermore, although a state may authorize unions to compel financial support for its collective bargaining activities, this Court has made clear that a union must, at a minimum, provide nonmembers the ability to "opt-out" regarding the use of their funds for political purposes. Such an option is necessary to avoid a violation of the contributing nonmembers' constitutional rights.

At issue in this case is whether a state may go beyond this minimum constitutional protection of nonmembers' rights, to provide additional statutory protection for nonmembers by requiring a union to obtain affirmative authorization from nonmembers before using such individuals' funds for political purposes. Amicus believes that a state may constitutionally do so.

³ Of course, there is no need for a jurisdiction to create a statutory right for unions to compel members to pay fees – as such individuals, by definition, do so voluntarily through payment of member dues.

The Supreme Court of Washington began its analysis by correctly recognizing this Court's long line of cases establishing that "compulsory union dues may not be used to support political causes if the member disagrees with those causes." WEA, 156 Wash. 2d at 558. The Washington Court then went on to misconstrue this Court's decisions in Street and Abood as establishing – as a matter of constitutional law – "that the burden is on the employee to make his objection known." Id. at 559.

The Washington Court confused this Court's articulation of what the Constitution requires with regard to nonmembers' rights, as a statement of the extent to which the Constitution permits states to protect nonmembers' rights. Put differently, the Washington Court misconstrued this Court's decisions as establishing the maximum First Amendment rights possessed by union nonmembers, when, in fact, the decisions established their minimum First Amendment rights.

As explained by Washington Supreme Court Justice Sanders in dissent:

The majority turn[ed] the First Amendment on its head. Unions have a statutory, not a constitutional, right to cause employers not only to withhold and remit membership dues but also to withhold and remit fees from nonmembers in an equivalent amount. Absent this statutory mechanism for withholding and remission of agency fees (or membership fees for that matter), there is no right, constitutional or otherwise, for the union to require it.

WEA, 156 Wash. 2d at 571-72 (Sanders, J., dissenting). Justice Sanders further explained that the majority “distort[ed]” this Court’s decisions “delineating the requirements protecting dissenting union members and nonmembers from having their dues used to support political activities with which they disagree to do the opposite: limit the State’s ability to protect such dissenters.” Id. at 574-75.

We respectfully urge this Court to grant the State of Washington’s petition for a writ of certiorari in order to clarify the question of whether the Court’s decisions in Street, Abood, Hudson, and Ellis merely establish the minimum First Amendment rights of dissenting workers or, instead, establish the maximum extent to which legislative bodies may protect the constitutional rights of dissenting workers.

II. THE DECISION BELOW INVALIDATING THE STATE’S “OPT-IN” REQUIREMENT DIRECTLY CONFLICTS WITH THIS COURT’S DECISION IN MCCONNELL UPHOLDING THE FEDERAL “OPT-IN” REQUIREMENT.

The Supreme Court of Washington’s decision below establishes the precedent that a statutory requirement that workers “opt-in” to supporting a union’s political activities violates the union’s constitutional rights. That ruling directly conflicts with this Court’s decision in McConnell, which upheld the federal separate segregated fund “opt-in” requirement, and undermines more than 50 years of congressional regulation of labor union use of treasury funds to influence elections.

The Hatch Act, enacted more than 65 years ago, is widely recognized as the first congressional restriction on labor union political activity. See, e.g., McConnell, 540 U.S. at 116. This Court, in McConnell, approvingly detailed Congress' long history of regulating labor union political activities. The Court began its analysis by reviewing Congress' regulation of corporate political activity dating back to 1907 in an effort to explain that restrictions on corporate and labor union political activity are cut from the same cloth. The Court explained at length:

Congress' historical concern with the "political potentialities of wealth" and their "untoward consequences for the democratic process," has long reached beyond corporate money. During and shortly after World War II, Congress reacted to the "enormous financial outlays" made by some unions in connection with national elections. Congress first restricted union contributions in the Hatch Act, 18 U.S.C. § 610, and it later prohibited "union contributions in connection with federal elections altogether." Congress subsequently extended that prohibition to cover unions' election-related expenditures as well as contributions, and it broadened the coverage of federal campaigns to include both primary and general elections. Labor Management Relations Act, 1947 (Taft-Hartley Act), 61 Stat. 136. During the consideration of those measures, legislators repeatedly voiced their concerns regarding the pernicious influence of large campaign contributions. See 93 Cong. Rec. 3428, 3522 (1947); H.R. Rep. No. 245, 80th Cong., 1st Sess. (1947); S. Rep. No. 1, 80th Cong., 1st Sess., pt. 2 (1947); H.R. Rep. No. 2093, 78th Cong., 2d Sess. (1945). As we noted in a unanimous [Nat'l Right to Work] opinion recalling this history,

Congress' "careful legislative adjustment of the federal electoral laws, in a 'cautious advance, step by step,' to account for the particular legal and economic attributes of corporations and labor organizations warrants considerable deference."

McConnell, 540 U.S. at 116-17 (footnote omitted) (citations and quotation marks omitted) (emphasis added) (quoting U.S. v. Automobile Workers, 352 U.S. 567, at 577-84 (1957); Fed. Election Comm'n v. Nat'l Right to Work Comm., 459 U.S. 197, 209 (1982)).

The McConnell Court reviewed the history of congressional regulation of labor union political activity as a preface to its consideration of a constitutional challenge to a then-recent amendment to the longstanding ban on labor union use of treasury funds for political contributions and expenditures, which was enacted by Congress as part of the Bipartisan Campaign Reform Act of 2002 (BCRA), § 203, Pub. L. No. 107-155, 116 Stat. 81 (codified at 2 U.S.C. § 441b).

BCRA § 203 (codified at 2 U.S.C. § 441b) prohibits labor unions and corporations from using treasury funds to pay for "electioneering communication." See 2 U.S.C. §§ 441b(a) and (b)(2). "Electioneering communication," in turn, is defined to mean any broadcast, cable, or satellite communication that refers to a clearly identified candidate for federal office, made within 30 days of a primary election or 60 days of a general election, and targeted to the relevant electorate. See 2 U.S.C. §§ 441b(c)(1) and 434(f)(3).

The McConnell Court began its analysis of the constitutionality of this BCRA restriction on labor union political activity by noting:

Since our decision in Buckley, Congress' power to prohibit corporations and unions from using funds in their treasuries to finance advertisements expressly advocating the election or defeat of candidates in federal elections has been firmly embedded in our law. The ability to form and administer separate segregated funds authorized by FECA § 316, 2 U.S.C.A. § 441b (main ed. and Supp. 2003), has provided corporations and unions with a constitutionally sufficient opportunity to engage in express advocacy. That has been this Court's unanimous view, and it is not challenged in this litigation.

McConnell, 540 U.S. at 203 (footnote omitted) (emphasis added).

Like the Washington "opt-in" provision invalidated by the Supreme Court of Washington, federal law allows labor union political activity only to the extent that workers "opt-in" to a union's political activities by contributing to a labor union PAC. See 2 U.S.C. § 441b(b). However, whereas this Court, in McConnell, made clear the Court's "unanimous view" that such an "opt-in" procedure provides unions with a "constitutionally sufficient" opportunity to engage in political speech, the Supreme Court of Washington's decision below held that such an "opt-in" procedure violates the constitutional rights of labor unions.

The McConnell Court reasoned that BCRA's ban on labor union use of treasury funds to pay for "electioneering communication" intended to influence voters' decisions is the "functional equivalent" of the longstanding ban on labor union use of treasury funds to pay for "express advocacy" political advertising. McConnell, 540 U.S. at 206. The Court upheld the BCRA labor union restriction as constitutional, finding the federal law "opt-in" PAC provision constitutionally sufficient to protect a union's First Amendment rights in both the "express advocacy" and "electioneering communication" contexts.

The Supreme Court of Washington's decision in this case invalidating Washington's "opt-in" provision on the ground that the provision violates the First Amendment rights of unions directly conflicts with this Court's decision in McConnell, where the Court upheld the "opt-in" provision of 2 U.S.C. § 441b, as well as the many other decisions of this Court that have upheld the "opt-in" provision of 2 U.S.C. § 441b against constitutional challenge. See, e.g., Nat'l Right to Work Comm., 459 U.S. 197; Austin v. Michigan Chamber of Commerce, 494 U.S. 652 (1990); Fed. Election Comm'n v. Beaumont, 539 U.S. 146 (2003).

III. THE WASHINGTON SUPREME COURT'S DECISION UNDERMINES STATE "OPT-IN" LAWS THROUGHOUT THE NATION.

The Supreme Court of Washington's decision in this case not only undermines longstanding federal law restrictions on labor union use of treasury funds to influence elections, but also undermines the laws of at least fourteen other states that have followed Congress' lead – approved by this Court – by similarly restricting labor union and corporate candidate-related political activity.⁴

⁴ See, e.g., Alaska Stat. §§ 15.13.067, 15.13.074 and 15.13.400(8) (2006); Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 16-919, 16-920, and 16-921 (West 2006); COLO. CONST. art. XXVIII, §§ 3(4) and 6(2); Ind. Code Ann. §§ 3-9-2-4 and 3-9-2-5(b) (West 2006); Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. §§ 169.254(1) and 169.255 (West 2006); Mont. Code Ann. § 39-31-402 (2006); N.C. Gen. Stat. § 163-278.19 (2006); N.D. Cent. Code §§ 16.1-08.1-01 and 16.1-08.1-03.3 (2006); Ohio Rev. Code Ann. §§ 3517.082, 3599.03 and

(Continued on following page)

The appendix to this brief contains descriptions of fourteen states' "opt-in" laws restricting union and corporate political activity, all of which would seemingly be invalid if the reasoning of the Washington Supreme Court were followed.

Although the Supreme Court of Washington's decision is not controlling law in other states, courts in other states will likely rely on the Washington Court's decision as authority to strike down state law "opt-in" restrictions on labor union political activity. Given that the Supreme Court of Washington relied exclusively on its misconstruction of this Court's decisions as the basis for its invalidation of Wash. Rev. Code § 42.17.760, we urge this Court to grant the state's petition for a writ of certiorari in order to clarify that "opt-in" restrictions on union political activities in states around the nation do not violate the First Amendment rights of unions.

3599.031 (West 2006); Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 25, § 3253 and Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 43, § 1101.1701 (West 2006); R.I. Gen. Laws §§ 17-25-3(1) and 17-25-10.1(h) (2006); S.D. Codified Laws §§ 12-25-1(1) and 12-25-2 (2006); Tex. Elec. Code Ann. §§ 253.094 and 253.100 (Vernon 2006); and Wyo. Stat. Ann. § 22-25-102 (2006).

CONCLUSION

For the foregoing reasons, and on the basis of the authorities cited, a writ of certiorari should issue to review the decision of the Supreme Court of Washington.

Dated: August 14, 2006

Respectfully submitted,

TREVOR POTTER
J. GERALD HEBERT
Counsel of Record
PAUL S. RYAN
CAMPAIGN LEGAL CENTER
1640 Rhode Island Ave. NW
Suite 650
Washington, DC 20036
(202) 736-2200

APPENDIX

The following are brief descriptions of the laws of fourteen states which, like the State of Washington and the federal government, have established "opt-in" restrictions on labor union political activity.

Under Alaska law, labor unions and corporations are prohibited from using treasury funds to make candidate-related political contributions and expenditures. However, labor unions may make contributions and expenditures through a PAC (called a "group" under Alaska law) to the extent that individuals "opt-in" to such political activity by making contributions to the PAC. See Alaska Stat. §§ 15.13.074, 15.13.067, and 15.13.400(8) (2006).

Likewise, Arizona law prohibits labor unions and corporations from making candidate-related political contributions or expenditures using treasury funds. However, as under federal law, an Arizona union or corporation is permitted to establish a PAC that may make political contributions and expenditures to the extent that salaried corporate employees and shareholders, or union members, "opt in" to such political activity by contributing to the PAC. See Ariz. Rev. Stat. Ann. §§ 16-919, 16-920, and 16-921 (West 2006).

The Colorado Constitution prohibits unions and corporations from making contributions to candidates or political parties, and also prohibits unions and corporations from making expenditures or payments for electioneering communication, using treasury funds. A Colorado union or corporation is permitted to establish a PAC, which may accept "opt-in" contributions from employees, members and shareholders. COLO. CONST. art. XXVIII, §§ 3(4) and 6(2).¹

App. 2

Under Indiana law, though political contributions from individuals are unlimited, contributions from union and corporate treasuries are strictly limited. For example, a union may only contribute an aggregate of $5,000 apportioned in any manner among all candidates for state office, and an aggregate of $5,000 apportioned in any manner among all state political party committees. See Ind. Code Ann. § 3-9-2-4 (West 2006). However, a union or corporation may establish and pay the administrative costs of a PAC and encourage individuals to “opt-in” to supporting the PAC by voluntarily contributing to it. See id. at § 3-9-2-5(b). Unlike contributions from union and corporate treasuries which are strictly limited, contributions to candidates and parties from union and corporate PACs are unlimited.

Michigan prohibits unions and corporations from making political contributions and expenditures using treasury funds. See Mich. Comp. Laws Ann. § 169.254(1) (West 2006). Michigan law does permit a union or corporation to establish a PAC to engage in political spending, but ¹ The application of these state constitutional provisions were recently challenged on federal constitutional grounds by a nonprofit 501(c)(4) corporation that receives “approximately $50 of corporate funding per year.” Colo. Right to Life v. Davidson, 395 F. Supp. 2d 1001, 1014 (D. Colo. 2005). The district court found that the plaintiff was entitled to an exemption from the state laws under this Court’s decision in Fed. Election Comm’n v. Mass. Citizens for Life, Inc., 479 U.S. 238 (1986). Colo. Right to Life, 395 F. Supp. 2d at 1014-15. The district court’s decision in Colo. Right to Life is presently on appeal and has no bearing on the application of Colorado’s “opt-in” requirement to labor unions.

App. 3

further provides that a union may only finance such a PAC with “opt-in” contributions from members. See id. at § 169.255(1)-(4). Specifically, Michigan law provides that a union may solicit contributions from a member “on an automatic basis, including but not limited to a payroll deduction plan, only if the individual who is contributing to the fund affirmatively consents to the contribution at least once in every calendar year.” Id. at § 169.255(6) (emphasis added).

Montana flatly prohibits labor unions from using agency shop fees to make political contributions. See Mont. Code Ann. § 39-31-402 (2006).

The State of North Carolina prohibits labor unions and corporations from using treasury funds to make candidate-related contributions or expenditures. Unions and corporations may, however, establish PACs in order to make contributions and expenditures to the extent that individuals “opt-in” to financially supporting union and corporate political activities by contributing to such PACs. See N.C. Gen. Stat. § 163-278.19 (2006).

North Dakota prohibits unions and corporations from using treasury funds to make contributions to candidates and parties. However, state law permits unions and corporations to establish PACs for political purposes, which workers may “opt-in” to supporting by making contributions. See N.D. Cent. Code §§ 16.1-08.1-01(1), (4) and 16.1-08.1-03.3 (2006).

Ohio law prohibits unions and corporations from using treasury funds to make political contributions or expenditures supporting or opposing candidates. See Ohio Rev. Code Ann. § 3599.03 (West 2006). A union or corporation may, however, establish a PAC and solicit “opt-in” contributions for such a PAC from members, employees, and shareholders; any deduction of political contributions from employee wages requires written authorization by the employee. See id. at §§ 3517.082 and 3599.031.

App. 4

Pennsylvania law prohibits unions and corporations from using treasury funds to make political contributions or expenditures, but permits such entities to establish PACs, which individuals may “opt-in” to supporting by making voluntary contributions. See Pa. Stat. Ann. tit. 25, § 3253 (West 2006); see also id. at tit. 43, § 1101.1701.

Rhode Island law prohibits unions and corporations from using treasury funds to make political contributions or expenditures, but permits such entities to administer “opt-in” payroll deduction schemes through which employees may voluntarily “opt-in” to making contributions to political committees and candidates. See R.I. Gen. Laws §§ 17-25-10.1(h) and 17-25-3(1) (2006).

South Dakota law prohibits unions and corporations from using treasury funds to make political contributions, but permits such entities to establish PACs, which individuals may “opt-in” to supporting by making voluntary contributions. See S.D. Codified Laws §§ 12-25-1(1) and 12-25-2 (2006).

The State of Texas prohibits unions and corporations from using treasury funds to make contributions to or expenditures in support of candidates. Unions and corporations are, however, permitted to establish PACs, and may only solicit “opt-in” contributions to such PACs from members and employees. See Tex. Elec. Code Ann. §§ 253.094 and 253.100 (Vernon 2006).

App. 5

Finally, Wyoming law prohibits unions and corporations from using treasury funds to make political contributions. Such entities may solicit “opt-in” contributions to a PAC for political purposes, but a union’s use of any payroll deduction scheme for the making of such contributions requires the contributing individual to “affirmatively consent[] in writing to the contribution at least once in every calendar year.” See Wyo. Stat. Ann. §§ 22-25-102(a) and (h) (2006).
